GEN. LEE AS A COLLEGE PRESIDENT.
Dr. Bagby writes to his paper from Lexington the following in regard to Gen. Lee:

And here it will be in place to relate that, on my return from Lexington, a gentleman in the coach expressed the fear that Gen. Lee's kindness of heart and his desire to enlarge the College might, perhaps, make him too lenient and, possibly, lower the scholastic standard.
To quiet his fears, I told him what had been told me a few days before by a clergyman residing in Lexington:

"Gen. Lee's office," said he, "is no sinecure.
His work taxes to the utmost his powerful constitution. He registers in his mind not only the face but the name of each of the 410 students. Nor is that all. He can tell you the standing of each student in the several branches which he studies, and any neglect of duty is promptly punished."

"Punished!" I exclaimed.
"Yes," said he, "in General Lee's own way."

"How is that?" I enquired.
"Well not long since a young friend of mine who is in the College, confessed to me that he had been, as he expressed it, 'hauled up'—that is, he had received a message to see him in his office."

"Did Gen. Lee lecture you?"
"No, indeed."

"Did he scold you?"
"Scold! I only wish he had. He talked to me so kindly that he nearly broke my heart, and you don't catch me in there again, I tell you."

That is "Gen. Lee's way," not like Stonewall Jackson's, but quite as effective in the case of Jackson's in the army. If we add to this personal supervision of each individual student the labor of correspondence, (a great deal of which cannot be taken off his hands) and other duties, we may understand how it is that the report, which went the rounds of the papers a few months ago, of the General's failing health should have gained credence. He has improved very much of late, but does not present the robust appearance to which our eyes were accustomed during the war.

The reverent affection and admiration with which Gen. Lee is regarded by the citizens of Lexington seems rather to increase than to lessen—proof enough, if proof were wanting, of the true greatness of the man. Whenever he rides through the village, the people watch him with as much interest as though they had never seen him before, and if he chance to stop in the street on some business, they linger at their doors and windows as if their eyes would never tire of gazing upon that face so heroic yet so full of all gentleness.

ANOTHER OUTRAGE.—The people of the North will probably never know, as they cannot fully realize, all the frightful and inhuman tortures inflicted upon the South at the hands of military satraps. Our attention has been called to a case quite as flagrant as that of the Columbus prisoners.

It seems that about six weeks ago a Federal soldier was killed at Warrenton, in this State.
No clue, so far as we can ascertain, has yet been afforded to detect the perpetrator of this violation. But the military authorities—those fine gentlemen sent here to preserve order and protect the innocent—assumed full knowledge of the case; and, without cognizance of law, and without the feeble show of affidavits from any party or parties whatsoever, arrested a peaceful and inoffensive citizen of Warrenton by the name of Oddy. This gentleman was hauled off to Milledgeville, with manacles on his ankles and wrists. While thus chained, and in a dungeon, he was brutally attacked by four or five soldiers, who had been imprisoned in the same apartment for trivial misdemeanors.
These soldiers set upon him because they deemed him to be the slayer of one of their comrades. As their superiors did not give the unfortunate man a chance to exculpate himself, neither did these base underlings allow him the charity of a doubt. One of them kicked him in the mouth leaving a hideous gash upon his lip, and Mr. Oddy was finally saved from fatal consequences through the rescue of a sergeant of the guard.

A military commission was then designated for his trial at Milledgeville, and one day's notice given of the time to Mr. Oddy's counsel.
Upon repairing to Milledgeville the counsel was informed that the order for trial had been revoked, and Atlanta substituted for Milledgeville.

The trial took place one hundred and twenty miles from the residence of the prisoner, and occupied twenty-one days, during which time Mr. Oddy was marched from his cell to the court, chained like a felon at his ankles and wrists.

Now mark the sequel. After an abrupt seizure; maltreatment, when manacled, by Federal soldiers; transportation and imprisonment remote from his residence; a tedious trial, and the degrading handicap of a condemned criminal—he was allowed to go homeward fully requited of the charge against him.—Augusta (Ga.) Constitutionalist.
